

The Other Indians Essays on Pastoralists and Prehistoric Tribal People

The essays in this volume are an attempt to tease out from the scant archaeological (and to some extent historical) sources available, some information on certain aspects of rural societies in the past: mobility, subsistence from animal herding, symbiosis between crop production and animal rearing, situating hunters and gatherers, and the importance of forest as integral to rural life rather than the dichotomous other of the field or village. There is also an attempt to bring out the ways in which tribal society, continuously misrepresented in academia today, laid the foundations of many aspects of Indian civilization in the remote past. Contents: 1. Hunter-Gatherer and Early Agriculturist: Archaeological Evidence for Contact 2. Our Tribal Past 3. A Chalcolithic Village in a Famine Belt 4. Pastoralism as an Issue in Historical Research
