Not illustrated. 1897 edition. Excerpt: ... PREFACE. In submitting to my readers the following account of my travels in Biblical lands, and of my Assyrian and Babylonian discoveries, I do so with diffidence, feeling that it is an unworthy sequel to the fascinating and interesting narratives of my late lamented friend, Sir Austen Henry Layard, which are of wide-world reputation. I am emboldened, however, by the fact that it was his fond desire that I should lay before the world the record of my humble contribution to that branch of learning in connection with ancient history, both sacred and profane. With the exception of a few lectures I delivered before different societies, and a slight mention made of them by Sir Henry in his abridged work, entitled Nineveh and Babylon, published in 1867 by Mr. John Murray, no full account has yet appeared of my different discoveries, though the Illustrated London News produced, in May, 1856, a few specimens of the bas-reliefs found by me in Assur-bani-pals palace, with a generous tribute to my success. Beyond these notices, no record has appeared anywhere of the share I have had in Assyrian and Babylonian discoveries; the consequence was, that not many years afterwards some of my acquisitions were attributed to others, and, actually, the Assyrian legends of the Creation and Deluge tablets, which I found in Nineveh, in Assur-bani-pals palace, in 1853, were credited to Mr. George Smiths exploration, which he undertook for the proprietors of the Daily Telegraph twenty years afterwards, because, forsooth, he was the first Assyrian scholar who had deciphered them! Even in the present ninth edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica, in which historical records ought to be strictly correct, the following appears in a note in Vol. XVII, page 512,...
