

Excerpt from The Hero of Esthonia, Vol. 2 of 2: And Other Studies in the Romantic Literature of That Country An orphan boy had been brought up in the household, and had served first as gooseherd, and then as page; but he was always known as Goose-Tony. He was nearly of the same age as the young lady, who had been his playmate, and he declared that the rich suitor was a murderer; his heart told him so, and his presentiments had never yet deceived him. The boy was scolded and threatened, but his warnings made so much impression that he was allowed to accompany the bride to her new home. Three weeks afterwards, the husband set out on a journey, leaving his keys with his wife, among which was the gold key of the forbidden chamber. He warned her that if she even looked in, he would be forced to behead her with his own hand. She begged him in vain to take charge of it himself; but he refused, and left it with her.
