

SPEC Kit 310: Author Addenda

Recent developments in scholarly communication have raised the issue of author rights on academic campuses with increasing frequency. The NIH Public Access Policy, the expanding interest in and use of institutional repositories, the innovation of new models of publishing, and the growing number of universities mandating open access policies are changing the current environment of scholarly dissemination. Consequently, it is increasingly important to manage copyright in ways that serve author interests and those of the scholarly community. Faculty at many large academic institutions have endorsed author addenda, to be used by authors when signing a publication agreement. These addenda, if accepted by the publisher, allow the author to retain rights to use their work and to share their research widely. This survey was designed to provide information on the use of author addenda at ARL member institutions, which rights authors are encouraged to retain, and the methods by which libraries are conducting promotion and outreach efforts on the topic of author rights and addenda.
