

EFL Learners Written Discourse Competence: A Case Study

This study has been an attempt to investigate the Sudanese EFL learners composing competence from a discourse analysis perspective with the major objective of publicising the discourse culture in the writing research community in Sudan, following a series of writing research that centred on the analysis of linguistic competence in the students writing. Examination of written materials from three universities has revealed that learners overall writing quality is below average even though they were preparing to graduate with a B.A in English. The findings have also shown that learners writing is characterised by low grasp of textual cohesion, coherence and mechanics
